

In the last quarter of 1983: IS120b. pumped into the economy

By AVI TEMKIN
Post Economic Reporter

The government and the Bank of Israel printed money and extended credits amounting to some IS120 billion during the last three months of 1983, according to a Bank of Israel document issued yesterday.

According to the central bank's financial report for 1983, the public withdrew some IS15b. from maturing saving schemes, worsening the situation.

The figures in the bank's report are much higher than the money injection statistics published monthly by the government. This is because the Bank of Israel report includes liquidity injected by the central bank as well as credits granted by the government to the private sector.

The central bank's figures revealed that the public used about half of the extra liquidity to buy foreign currency and finance imports. The public spent another IS40b. on foreign currency-linked deposit accounts (patam).

Bank of Israel officials reacted yesterday by saying that during the last months of the year the public's financial assets had contracted sharply, following the stock market crash. "This makes any talk of a liquidity flood unfounded," the officials said.

Nevertheless, the officials conceded that there is a problem with the large sums printed by the government and the withdrawals from long-term saving schemes. "These sums do represent a potential danger," they said.

Speaking yesterday to the Knesset Finance Committee, Prof. Haim Barkai, former chairman of the central bank advisory board, warned that without a further cut in government spending the Treasury's targets for this year could prove unachievable.

Prof. Efraim Kleiman warned that no improvement in the balance of payments can be achieved if inflation is not brought under control.

Prof. Eitan Sheshinski told the committee that the Treasury demand for a quarterly adjustment of the budget according to revenue will be justified if there are large deviations from tax revenue forecasts.

West Bank delegation sees Arafat in Amman

Post Middle East Affairs Reporter and agencies

The delegation of West Bank leaders dispatched to Amman earlier this week met last night with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat.

There were no reports of what transpired at the meeting, but Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij, who is heading the 70-member delegation, told the English-language Jordan Times yesterday that they would be urging "a joint political framework before it is too late."

Freij had been warned not to meet with Arafat by the Israeli military administration, but West Bankers were not expecting a harsh reaction towards Freij from the Israeli authorities because of the meeting. There were two quiet demonstrations in Nablus yesterday — one for the meeting and one against it.

Earlier reports quoted sources in Amman as saying Arafat had agreed during a meeting with a delegation headed by Jordanian Prime Minister Ahmad Obaidat on Monday night to reactivate the joint Palestinian-Jordanian committee which suspended operations following the collapse of the earlier dialogue between the two men last April.

The joint committee, established following the 1978 Arab summit in Meshel to hand over reins, but only in 'good harmony'

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Histadrut Secretary-General Yeroham Meshel yesterday described his deputy, Israel Kessar, as his "good friend," promised to "hand over his job" in "good harmony" and advised Kessar to "escape the bear hugs" of members advocating an early transfer.

But Meshel persistently avoided saying when he plans to step down and avoid confirming an agreement with Kessar to do so in April. "I was elected to a full term of office, and this is my right. How to transfer the job in an orderly fashion to Israel Kessar is an arrangement between him and me," he said at a closed meeting of the Labour Party's Central Committee here. The minutes of his remarks were later made public.

Some Labour Party figures have been demanding Meshel's retirement as soon as possible. This follows disarray in the Labour Party generated by the suicide last Thursday of former Bank Hapoalim chairman Ya'acov Levinson. In a suicide note, Levinson said that he had been victimized by associates who had inspired an internal investigation into allegations of financial misbehaviour by Levinson, and then had leaked news of the investigation to the press.

At Meshel's urging, Bank Hapoalim has decided to hand its material on Levinson's alleged misdeeds to the attorney-general, who forwarded it to the police. Levinson shot himself on the eve of the police investigation, charging Histadrut and Bank Hapoalim leaders with a frame-up.

21 wounded, six still hospitalized Police hold 3 suspects in Jerusalem bombing

By ROBERT ROSENBERG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The police last night were holding three suspects in connection with yesterday morning's terror bombing in downtown Jerusalem in which 21 people were wounded. Six of them were still in hospital last night.

Two of four grenades, wrapped together and hidden in a plastic bag, exploded at about 9.30 a.m. just outside a Jaffa Road clothing shop. All the wounded were hurt by shrapnel and glass from the shop's shattered window.

Traffic got snarled up when police sought to clear the area so that sappers could neutralize two unexploded grenades and search for others.

Erica Gidron, 54, interviewed at her bedside in the emergency room of Bikur Holim, told The Jerusalem Post that "nobody wanted to help."

Gidron suffered extensive wounds from shrapnel and glass slivers, as well as leg injuries.

"I was bleeding, and I went to a shop and asked them to please help me but they wouldn't even let me in. Thankfully, a young man came by, took my arm and stopped a car, which brought me here." She said that "in 26 years in Israel, I never thought such a thing could happen."

Another victim, Efrat Shalev, 42, who was also hurt when a bomb exploded in an Egged bus in December, said: "I feel like a lightning conductor." She, too, tried unsuccessfully to get help after the explosion, it was reported. She motioned to a taxi to stop, but the driver sped off. "He probably thought I'd get the car dirty," she said with a bitter smile. Soon after, a clerk working in a nearby automobile hire service gave her a towel to wipe the blood from her wounds. Only then did a private car

Little evidence for claim that Iraq attacked oil port

NICOSIA. — Iran denied an official Iraqi report yesterday that Iraqi planes had attacked oil tankers anchored near its main oil-export terminal at Kharg Island.

"Alleged Iraqi attacks on oil tankers at Kharg Island oil terminal are imaginary and without foundation," reported Irna, the official Iranian news agency. "Such lies are aimed at covering up military defeats in 'Operation Keibar'."

Iraq meanwhile said yesterday its troops won the fiercest battle of the 42-month-old war after three days of fighting, annihilating four Iranian infantry divisions and killing more than 30,000 Iranian soldiers.

Iranian troops that managed to push into Iraq in the southern Basra sector of the front all have been pushed back across the border, said an Iraqi communiqué reported by the official Iraqi news agency, INA.

There was no immediate Iranian comment on the Iraqi victory report. Conflicting claims by the two sides cannot be independently confirmed, because they rarely allow foreign correspondents to visit the frontlines.

In Washington, Pentagon sources said U.S. reconnaissance had found no evidence to back up Iraq's claim of having hit oil tankers near Kharg Island.

"There were no signs of any burning tankers," said one source who spoke only on condition he remain anonymous.

"If there was an attack, there wasn't any damage so far as we could tell."

In London, Lloyds Shipping said it had no information that the Kharg Island terminal had been attacked. (AP, Reuter)

Two IDF soldiers killed in ambush

METULLA. — Two IDF soldiers were killed yesterday in an ambush near the southern Lebanese Shi'ite village of Arab Salim.

The two were Turai Nissim Biton, 35, of Ness Ziona, and Samal Mordechai Shkedi, 48, of Hadera. Shkedi's funeral is set for today in Hadera at 3 p.m.

Eyewitnesses said a rocket-propelled grenade was fired at two IDF jeeps. One jeep continued on its way, but the other stopped and was hit by small arms fire which killed two passengers.

A week ago, an IDF soldier was killed not far from the scene of this attack.

A search turned up a Kalashnikov assault rifle, an RPG launcher, handgrenades and ammunition.

A curfew was placed on Arab Salim. IDF forces conducted house-to-house searches.

Hundreds of vehicles carrying Lebanese Christians used this road yesterday on the way to a pro-Israel demonstration in Jezzine. An Egged bus carrying journalists to the event also used the road.

The attack occurred during the Jezzine demonstration.

In Sidon, a handgrenade was thrown at an IDF position yesterday, but no one was hurt. Also in that city, a delegation of businessmen met with IDF officers and promised to work to reduce tensions, which they said were harming commercial life.

U.S. leaving Lebanon to Arabs

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The Reagan administration is moving quickly to revive the broader Arab-Israeli peace process in the aftermath of the latest setbacks in Lebanon.

With nearly all U.S. Marines now out of Lebanon, special Middle East envoy Donald Rumsfeld is expected to leave shortly for Egypt, Israel, Jordan and other countries in the region to promote broader peace talks.

Rumsfeld, accompanied by his new deputy, Lawrence Silbermann, is not likely to include a stopover in Lebanon, officials here confirmed yesterday. They noted that the U.S. for the time being has suspended its pursuit of a political settlement there.

"We're letting the Arabs take the lead there," a U.S. official said. He mentioned the latest mediatory in-

Dollarization still viable, Aridor insists

By ARYEH RUBINSTEIN
Post Knesset Reporter

Former finance minister Yoram Aridor said yesterday that although he had resigned because he failed to win sufficient support for his dollarization plan, that very plan was now surfacing again, "borne on the waves of an annual inflation rate of 300-400 per cent."

Speaking in the debate on the 1984/85 state budget presented to the Knesset by Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad, Aridor criticized the measures taken by his successor and charged that Cohen-Orgad has no plan.

But mostly he defended his own policies. He said his critics had said that the main problem is not inflation, but the balance of payments. But today it is clear to all that the two cannot be separated, he said.

"If inflation soars, there is no growth. If there is no growth, there is no infrastructure for increasing exports. How then will the balance-of-payments problem be solved?" he asked.

Aridor recalled that his failure to make a package deal on wages, prices and taxes with the Histadrut had been attributed to the fact that "the minister of finance doesn't smile enough."

"Nu?" Aridor asked. "So why isn't there a package deal now?" He answered his own question: "It transpires that today, too, there is no package deal, not because the government doesn't want one, but because the Histadrut rejects it, for political reasons."

Aridor said that he had balked at devaluing the shekel to its real level, knowing full well that the price would be "crazy inflation." This

Jemayel going to Damascus to meet Assad

BEIRUT (AP). — Syrian-Lebanese summit talks will be held in Damascus within the next 48 hours following reports that President Amin Jemayel is about to scrap the May 17 accord with Israel to satisfy Syria and its Lebanese opposition allies, the official Syrian news agency said yesterday.

The agency, Sana, said Jemayel will visit Damascus "within the next 48 hours" for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad on the Lebanese crisis. Earlier, government sources in Beirut said the Lebanese president's trip was expected by the next weekend.

The sources said Lebanon was awaiting the return of Saudi mediator Rafik Hariri from Riyadh to accompany two Lebanese envoys to Damascus today to prepare for Jemayel's first visit to Syria since he assumed power in September 1982.

Assad has demanded that the U.S.-arranged May 17 agreement be abrogated before Assad would receive Jemayel, and one government source said "the agreement is finished, but the time for declaring its abrogation has yet to be set."

Another source said the envoys that would accompany Hariri to Damascus will probably be Foreign Minister Elie Salem and presidential adviser Jean Obeid, who reportedly enjoys good relations with Syrian officials.

"If all goes well, the summit meeting will be held over the weekend, but not before," the source said.

Sources said that Jemayel sent a message to Assad on Monday requesting a meeting with him this week.

The diplomatic efforts, however, were accompanied by continuing battles between Christian and Moslem militiamen in downtown Beirut and in hilltops overlooking the capital. Scores of artillery shells and rockets crashed in residential neighborhoods of West and East Beirut.

Battles began overnight and continued through the day along the "green line" that divides Beirut into Christian and Moslem sectors. The

Demonstrators urge honouring May 17 pact 20,000 Christian Lebanese gather at pro-Israel rally

By MENAHEM HOROWITZ

JEZZINE. — Some 20,000 Christians from all parts of Lebanon demonstrated here yesterday, calling for the implementation of the May 17 Lebanese-Israeli agreement and declaring their identification with the Jewish people.

The demonstrators came from towns and villages north and south of the Awali River. They displayed placards in English, Hebrew and Arabic reading "Yes to Israel," "Yes to peace," and "We reject the Syrian presence in Lebanon."

Israeli and Lebanese flags flew from rooftops while a local band played and little girls in white waved tiny flags of both nations. Among the speakers were village leaders, priests and militia officers.

A spokesman for the Mashref village north of the Awali said: "We want total cooperation with the Jewish people and the IDF. We want to support the Jewish people in its peaceful mission in Lebanon." He added that this was the first time in the history of the Levant that Christians were openly asking for Jewish help.

The mayor of the near-by village of Rhum, George Haddad, said that Lebanese Christians are asking President Amin Jemayel not to cancel the agreement with Israel. His remarks were applauded.

The Phalange commander in the south, Nazir Nazarian, said that the party and militia do not want the agreement abrogated. "If the president cancels it, we'll oppose the government and carry it out by ourselves," he said.

He added that all those gathered in Jezzine yesterday aimed at the creation of a "free Christian coalition" in South Lebanon. This coalition will be openly allied with Israel, he said.

"We want your friendship. As for keeping the IDF here, that is something you Israelis will have to decide," Nazarian said.

Shamir: U.S. won't meet PLO under present conditions

By ASHER WALLFISH
Post Knesset Correspondent

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said yesterday that the U.S. administration remains faithful to its commitment not to talk to the PLO as long as the PLO does not fulfil American conditions for a dialogue.

Those conditions entail acceptance of Security Council resolutions 242 and 338 and also the recognition of Israel's right to exist.

Replying to a question in the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee from its chairman Elisha Ben-Elissar, Shamir said that he had ordered Washington Ambassador Meir Rosenne to obtain clarifications from the State Department and to lodge a protest, after press reports in the U.S. about American contacts with the PLO.

Rosenne told Under Secretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger that the reports indicated a grave development, not only in the actual contact between Americans and the PLO, but also in violation of the French resolution calls for UN force in Beirut

UNITED NATIONS (AP). — France yesterday revised its resolution on Lebanon, calling for a cease-fire and the replacement of the multinational peacekeeping force with a UN force in Lebanon.

The Security Council said. The Soviet Union, however, called the resolution unacceptable.

The revised French resolution stipulates that the cease-fire should apply throughout Lebanon, but that the UN force should monitor it only in the Beirut area. The revised version reflected some of the suggestions for changes that had been made in private talks among 15 Security Council members last Friday and Monday, Security Council officials said.

The council president, Pakistani Ambassador Sardar Shah Nawaz, called midday private consultations of the council to get members' opinions of the new resolution.

The UN force would replace the multinational force from France, Italy, Britain and the U.S., most of which has been withdrawn.

The council, by request of France, has been debating the situation in Lebanon since mid-February.

The Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent adds: Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said yesterday that the French proposal for a new UN force in Lebanon could only work in the unlikely event that all the warring parties there agreed to it.

Shamir said all-party agreement was the basic prerequisite for an international peace force. It explained the success of the MFO in Sinai — and the absence of it explained the failure of Unifil and the MNF in Lebanon.

The premier spoke at length on this issue with the visiting director-general of the Finnish Foreign Ministry, Matti Tuovinen.

A Finnish unit serves with one of the successful UN forces in the Middle East — Unifil on the Golan Heights.

Shamir contended moreover that an international force, by its nature, could not be a fighting force, but only a buffer zone. That was another reason, he said, why a Unifil-type unit alone could not adequately protect southern Lebanon from PLO encroachments.

Tuovinen held working sessions with his opposite number, David Kimche, and senior aides at the Foreign Ministry. Kimche also hosted a lunch for the Finnish diplomat at Kibbutz Ma'aleh Hahamisha.

Two suspect drugs marketed freely here

By D'VORA BEN SHAUL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Two anti-rheumatic drugs manufactured by Ciba-Geigy of Switzerland and which may have killed 1,182 persons are still being marketed in Israel.

The drugs, both containing phenylbutazone, are the centre of a controversy that involves more than a dozen countries. It is believed that some 200 million patients have used the drugs. Norwegian and American sources claim that the two drugs are to blame for some 10,000 deaths.

The two compounds available in Israel, Tanderil, which is imported, and Shigroind, manufactured locally by Ikapharm in Kfar Sava, are believed to have caused a large number of fatal cases of aplastic anaemia, or failure of the bone marrow to produce sufficient red blood cells, and agranulocytosis, failure to produce white blood cells.

In Israel three adverse but non-fatal reactions to the drug were reported in 1981. More recent statistics are not available.

The Health Ministry was unable to comment on the future of the drug in Israel yesterday, but promised an answer within a few days. Pharmacists said they had received no instructions as to special handling of prescriptions for the drugs.

At Ikapharm, the pharmacologist in charge of drug regulation said that his company had decided, on its own initiative to discontinue the production of Shigroind and had notified the Health Ministry of its intention to do so, requesting cancellation of their license.

An 800-page investigative report undertaken by Ciba-Geigy, whose drug sales last year totalled $2 billion, led to the rewriting of instruction leaflets provided with the drug. It called on physicians to carefully weigh the risks before prescribing the medication.

The leaflet, issued last July, also recommends that the drug be used only in acute situations, in controlling one specific and particularly painful spinal condition known as Bekhterev's disease, and that treatment not be continued for more than one week.

As of this week, however, Tanderil was available in Israeli pharmacies without the new instruction leaflet.

Norway this month banned the drug as of April 1, and the West German government has severely restricted its use. The U.S. Department of Health is reported to be considering banning the drug due to public pressure. A meeting to which interested parties are invited will be held in Berlin on March 15 to discuss the drugs.

Particularly outspoken are experts from Sweden such as Dr. Olle Hansson, a neurologist, and a leading critic of Ciba-Geigy since 1977, when the company paid $10 million in damages to some 10,000 Japanese who suffered severe neurological disorders after taking the firm's anti-diarrhea drug, Chinoform.

Ciba-Geigy says that the two anti-rheumatic drugs have been largely replaced by a safer but less effective compound called Voltaren.

This, however, has been implicated in the death of about 40 persons during the 10 years it has been on the market.

Scouts become politically engaged

The Israel Scouts movement has decided to take a stand on political and social issues, thus breaking with its scrupulously apolitical past, an official press statement said yesterday.

The movement's council decided last week that the movement permits and encourages political involvement by all Scout troops after a two-thirds majority of the troop so decides. The minority, however, is allowed freedom to disagree, the council said.

Voting that the movement will taken action to deepen political awareness among its ranks, the council also said the movement would discuss and take positions on political questions under dispute if an outside body calls on the Scouts to do so.

The next meeting of the movement's central committee will decide its position on the question of "religious compulsion."

The official press communique stressed that the Scouts, although henceforth a politically engaged movement, would not be identified with any political party.

Mandelbaum urges package deal on wages, prices

By AVI TEMKIN
Post Economic Reporter

Without a package deal among the Histadrut, the private employers and the government, there is a real danger that the number of jobless will be greater than the forecasted 90,000, Bank of Israel Governor Moshe Mandelbaum said yesterday.

Speaking at a press conference in Jerusalem during which he presented the Bank's 1983 financial reports, Mandelbaum said that such an agreement should be designed to stabilize wages, prices and exchange rates. He added that until now it has been the labour federation, and not the government, which has opposed such an accord.

Mandelbaum also said that his opposition to the "dollarization" plan of former finance minister Yoram Aridor has grown since October. "As time passes I am more convinced that such a plan would not work in an economy like ours, with large balance of payments deficits," he said.

According to Mandelbaum, 1983 was a "hard year" which brought astonishing developments. The private sector, he said, had used some $1.6 billion to finance the purchase of foreign currency and imports during the year, he said. He added that this was largely offset by some $1.5 billion brought to the country by the public sector.

Mandelbaum also said that 1983 had witnessed something which was considered as unreal in the past, namely a large contraction in the public's monetary assets.

According to the bank's figures the monetary assets in the hands of the public, including cash, deposits, bonds, shares and saving schemes, had dropped in real terms by some 30 per cent. Especially marked was the contraction in the real value of shares, some 65 per cent compared to the end of 1982.

Foreign currency-linked deposits (patam), however, underwent a large increase during the year, some $1.4 billion, or 46 per cent in real terms.

Mandelbaum said that the Israeli banking system, despite recent developments, still has a high reputation abroad, and that the amount of foreign residents' deposits has not decreased in the last few months.

The governor insisted that Israel's financial standing abroad will depend on the government's ability to cut the budget and on the improvement of the balance of payments.

Speaking about the coming months, Mandelbaum said that now that the monetary assets of the public have gone down so sharply, the next step should be a cut in spending. "Monetary policy has done its share to reduce demands," he added.

According to Mandelbaum, the target for the central bank and the Treasury should be to cut government expenditure and to encourage savings as a means of ensuring the achievement of Treasury targets.

Kiryat Arba leaders guilty of obstruction of justice

Two leaders of the Kiryat Arba community were yesterday found guilty of interfering with the course of justice by destroying an explosive device they found hidden in the Kiryat Arba council building in the spring of 1982, Moshe Rosenthal, formerly the community's security officer, was given a six-month suspended sentence. Ze'ev Friedman, who was deputy chairman of the council, was given a nine-month suspended sentence.

The prosecution had charged them with the more serious crime of destroying evidence to obstruct justice. The maximum penalty for the former is five years imprisonment, and for the latter three years imprisonment.

The prosecution contended that the two men destroyed the explosive device after deciding that it may have been put together by Jews and may have been connected with the attack on the West Bank mayors in 1980.

District Court Judge Shalom Brenner said in his judgement that he did not accept the men's statement that their sole motivation in destroying the explosive device was to keep the name of Kiryat Arba

Soldiers ordered to remove editorial from Nahal magazine

Post Defence Reporter
TEL AVIV. — Nahal commander Tal-Aluf Yosef Eshkol had ordered an editorial critical of the army's involvement in Lebanon removed from the corps magazine, Bamahane Nahal.

Distribution of the magazine was subsequently delayed until soldiers cut the offending text from the pages already printed.

The editorial, written by editor Meir Doron, said he saw soldiers returning "eroded from yet another reserve stint in Lebanon. I see them getting poorer from (one service to the other)... I have friends and they are becoming fewer... I am afraid we are not counting our closed hearts among the casualties of this war."

Eshkol read the article after several magazines were distributed. He ordered a halt to the distribution and soldiers were assigned to cut the item from thousands of magazines sent throughout the IDF.

Copies sold to the public will not be cut, a military source said.

The IDF spokesman argued it was the Nahal commander's right and duty to see to it that the publication suits the army's wishes.

MESHEL TO HAND

Meshel said yesterday, "and what should the Histadrut secretary-general do, throw it away? Swallow it?"

He recalled cases in which the Histadrut's Central Control Committee had stopped its investigations and forwarded the material to the attorney-general. The people involved in those investigations also "have children and all have families," he noted. The Histadrut had to accord Levinson the same treatment, he added.

"In some countries there were courts for the poor and separate courts for the rich — but not here... If there is to be one law for some people and another law for a leader — this Histadrut will fall apart," he stressed.

The issue was not debated yesterday, but a special Central Committee meeting will discuss the Levinson affair at the end of the seven days of mourning.

Alluding to reports of strained relations with Kassar, now the head of the Trade Union Department as well as permanent acting Secretary General, Meshel said he wished "there was the same basic understanding as exists between me and Kassar in every other Labour union in the world."

"My good friend Kassar," Meshel went on, "you will get the job in harmony with me. Don't get yourself indebted to anyone. They're not true friends."

Meshel maintained members pushing for his early retirement were motivated by expectations that Kassar would be indebted to them. "Maybe it's not good to be an acting Secretary-General for long. But when you are the secretary-general, you will be a target for attacks even by those who now like you so much. Be prepared for that," Meshel advised.

Kassar commented: "I've asked the army to let me keep the flak jacket."

Meshel made it clear he was aware that critics were looking for black spots in his own past, and told Mafim's senior representative Nafati Ben-Moshe: "It is a source of honour for me that they could not find any blemish in my life... They will not find many competitors to me in that respect. And how they looked!"

Meshel, who had been sharply attacked by Levinson in an interview he gave shortly before he died, said, "I am the one who should be very calm. I acted with the utmost possible friendship and tried to be honest and fair with a person who incessantly visited my house and my office."

PROSECUTOR CHARGED WITH TAKING BRIBES

HAIFA (Itim). — The chief municipal prosecutor here, Zusia Eitan, was yesterday charged in district court with receiving bribes, dereliction of duty, destroying evidence, obstructing justice, forging documents and fraud.

Eitan has been under arrest since February 8.

The prosecution said that just before his arrest, Eitan took a $100 bribe from a kiosk owner who had received a summons for operating an unlicensed business. Eitan was the prosecutor in the case and the alleged bribe was given so that proceedings would be dropped.

The bribery was witnessed by two detectives. When they approached Eitan, he tore up the dollars and allegedly tried to flush them down a toilet, but the detectives retrieved the bills, the charge sheet said.

Eitan is also charged with taking bribes of between 50 and 200 Israeli

Ashdod grain silo starts work

Bringing ships and silos together

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

As the $20 million Dagon company silo in Ashdod began operations this week, experts predicted that the government may soon allow the Ports Authority to spend $5m. deepening Dagon's berth at Haifa harbour.

Neither the Dagon berth at Haifa nor Ashdod harbour is deep enough to accommodate the larger grain carrying ships.

Indeed, the first ship unloaded into the new Ashdod silo had to stop off in Haifa on the way. There, by means of cranes and grabs, it was "lightened" by some 6,000 tons, to enable it to enter Ashdod harbour.

So far the Treasury has refused to sanction the authority's deepening of the berth, from its own funds, because the Trade Ministry, which imports the grain, has advised against the expenditure.

However, the Trade Ministry itself made the grain-carrying contract with the shipping companies conditional on their replacing their smaller ships with the much more economical large carriers. It now also recommends the berth deepening in Haifa. "The change over to the bigger ships went ahead faster than we had foreseen," Trade Minister Gideon Patt recently told The Jerusalem Post.

The Dagon company and shipping experts have recommended the deepening for several years.

The job would take a year to complete and it is estimated that it would pay for itself within 18 months.

The $20m. silo was built with the aid of a $17m. loan from the U.S. government.

Unloading was started from the 65,000 ton El-Yam company grain carrier, SS Minerva, which brought 48,000 tons of grain. The job is to take at least 12 days.

This is three times as long as is needed by the Dagon silo in Haifa port. The delay is due to the location of the Ashdod silo, two kilometres from the waterfront, which makes it necessary to use cranes and grabs for unloading.

A Dagon spokesman told The Post that the company was trying to work a third shift in Ashdod to reduce the waiting time of the ship, which costs thousands of dollars a day. But due to problems getting trucks for night work it was not clear how many night shifts would be possible.

Knesset passes eighth Basic Law

By ROBERT ROSENBERG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Israel took a step toward a completed written constitution yesterday when the Knesset passed Basic Law: Judiciary, the eighth of what will eventually be 11 Basic Laws comprising a constitution.

Justice Minister Moshe Nissim predicted yesterday that by the end of 1985, the last of the Basic Laws will be promulgated and that then it will be possible to draw up a constitution. However, he quickly added that political differences between various factions in the Knesset over the substance of Basic Law: Civil Rights, could create serious obstacles in the way of reaching a conclusion to the creation of all the Basic Laws.

Only Mordechai Virtsbusky of Shinui voted against the law, which aside from making some minor changes regarding the removal from office of poorly functioning judges, does little to change any of the existing laws concerning the state's judiciary.

Nissim yesterday told reporters that he expects that the remaining three Basic Laws — Civil Rights, State Comptroller, and Legislation — could all be through the Knesset by the end of 1985. However, he said, the civil rights basic law poses tremendous problems because of "those who believe they can make a revolution in Israel through that law."

He was referring to the ongoing debate between the religious parties and MKs from the liberal-left, who are at loggerheads over the extent to which matters involving religious authorities are to be expressed in the civil rights bill.

The minister emphasized that he sought as wide a consensus as possible for any of the Basic Laws he brings to the Knesset, and it therefore seems unlikely that he'll soon be bringing it to legislation without a broad consensus for the civil rights bill.

The most significant new element in the law passed yesterday was the mandate given to the Judicial Election Committee — a nine-member committee that includes Supreme Court justices, MKs, lawyers and the justice minister — to fire a judge.

It will take a seven-person majority on the Judicial Election Committee to remove a judge from a bench, and the purpose of the law is to enable the committee to remove judges who have been proven to be incompetent.

For breaches of discipline, the judicial disciplinary court has been given new authority to hand down graduated sentences enabling it to reprimand, fine, deny a pension to a judge convicted for breach of discipline.

Yesterday's legislation included, there are now eight Basic Laws: Presidency, Knesset, Government, Land Registry, Economy, Army, Jerusalem, and Judiciary.

Accord on tardy 'bagrut' scores

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Education Ministry and the universities yesterday reached an agreement which will allow students to register at the universities even if they have not yet received their matriculation (bagrut) certificates.

Because of delays in issuing matriculation scores, many potential students would be unable to seek admission to the universities for next fall if this agreement had not been reached. The deadline for submitting applications for admission to the universities is today.

Ministry officials, under orders from Minister Zevulun Hammer, the IDF and other organizations to find experts who can help solve the chronic delays in issuing scores. The minister has told his staff to channel all necessary personnel and resources into this task.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir chats yesterday with Juan Antonio Samaranch, head of the International Olympics Committee, who completes an official three-day visit to this country today. Samaranch also called on President Chaim Herzog and Knesset Speaker Menahem Savidor yesterday. (Rahamim Israeli)

MDs rapped for not reporting child abuse

By CHARLES HOFFMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Physicians are not as helpful as they should be in spotting cases of child abuse and reporting them to the welfare authorities.

This was stated yesterday by Dr. Yanita Tzimir, the head of ELI, the Israel Association for Child Protection, in a discussion of child abuse held by the Knesset Labour and Social Affairs Committee.

Tzimir, who has worked in this field for 15 years, said that hundreds of cases are reported every year to the authorities, but "thousands" are either hidden by parents or pass unrecognized by teachers or medical professionals.

Half the reported cases involve infants under six months old, she said.

"The very notion of parents inflicting systematic physical or sexual abuse on their children, or deliberately neglecting them, is so monstrous, so repelling, that normal people have difficulty recognizing cases when they are right under their noses," she said.

Indicators of child abuse have been developed, she said, but the medical profession has resisted introducing a reporting procedure in hospitals and clinics. The Education Ministry has also refrained from distributing a list of warning signs to teachers.

The law requires doctors, teachers and welfare professionals to report suspected cases of child abuse to the welfare authorities, but many professionals do not because they are afraid of violent reactions by the parents or because they do not want to get involved, Tzimir said. Only the most severe cases are passed on to the police, and the rest are supposed to be dealt with through therapy and counseling.

An amendment to the law imposing penalties on professionals who fail to report suspected cases of child abuse has just passed its preliminary reading in the Knesset.

ELI is a non-profit volunteer organization that works for greater public awareness of the problem and counsels parents who turn to it for help.

Couple charged with IS500,000 swindle

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A woman employed as a cashier in a factory display room here and her husband have been charged with stealing goods worth about IS500,000 during the past four years. The pair got rid of the goods through Hamashbir, Latzarchan shops, the charge sheet says.

The charge sheet, presented to the Tel Aviv District Court, claims that Sarita Sherf, 48, while working as a cashier in the Illex factory's display room stole bedclothes, towels and other textile products with the help of her husband, Shlomo, aged 49.

The Tel Aviv district prosecutor Aharon Shadar also charges that from August 1983, the couple would go into a Hamashbir Latzarchan shop and ask to exchange for a credit slip or purchase coupon the goods they said they had bought in another shop of the same chain. They then used this coupon or credit slip to buy other goods in the shop.

When making this exchange, they would give false names and addresses, the charge sheet says.

The swindle was uncovered on October 16, 1983 when the husband asked the Hamashbir store in Ashkelon to give him a credit in exchange for a purchase coupon for 10 towels given him by the Ashdod branch. He gave a fake name and address which were spotted by the head of the textile goods department, the charge sheet says.

Room for 100 detainees in B'sheba's new lock-up

BEERSHEBA. — Prisons Commissioner Mordechai Wertheimer his week expressed confidence that Beersheba's new lock-up will be ready in two months, as scheduled. The facility is designed to hold up to 30 men awaiting trial.

However, police sources here said they were not convinced that the new lock-up next to the Beersheba Prison would be ready in time.

The present police lock-up is overcrowded, with 70 detainees for the 48 beds available.

It has been learned that since the previous commander of the lock-up was removed from his position seven months ago, he has not been replaced. The policeman now in charge, who was previously acting commander of a police station near the border with Egypt, is apparently not considered a suitable candidate for the post, it was said.

Young Artists' Week opened by Herzog

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Young Artists' Week, sponsored by the American-Israel Cultural Foundation to encourage budding musicians, was opened last night at Beit Hanassi by President Chaim Herzog.

Events will take place in five cities and towns, with the main focus this year on chamber music. It is the 12th year in a row that the special week has been held to introduce holders of foundation scholarships to the public at large.

A recital will be held on March 3, with the Israel Philharmonic and young pianist Ilan Rechtman playing Brahms' First Piano Concerto. There will also be a chamber music marathon at the Tel Aviv Museum on March 8.

Some TA firemen on job after back-to-work orders

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Striking firefighters here gradually returned back to work yesterday afternoon after being handed back-to-work orders signed on Monday by the interior minister. But by evening, only eight of the 19 firefighters due on duty had arrived for work, while city officials continued searching for the remaining 11 in order to hand them the orders.

Tel Aviv's firefighters launched a general strike Sunday, demanding their pay be raised to equal that of Jerusalem's firefighters.

Before noon yesterday, a fire broke out in two abandoned wooden huts on Rehov Mesilat Ha'olim in the south of the city. Police called Ramat Gan firefighters for help, but these refused to come "out of solidarity" with the Tel Aviv firefighters, municipal sources said. Holon firefighters, who were then called by police, refused, maintaining they had enough problems of their own.

Meanwhile passersby had begun extinguishing the flames using fire hydrants on the street. A truck owner volunteered a hose and policemen joined in. Finally a fire truck from Givatayim arrived and completed the job.

DOLLARIZATION

had been denounced as a foolish theory concocted by him and his adviser, Dr. Yakir Plessner.

"But those who argued thus in the past can see from the experience acquired since my resignation. Inflation is indeed devouring the devaluation," he said.

He had further been advised that inflation would be halted if the budget were cut, Aridor said, and it is essential today that the budget be cut. He hoped that the government's decision to do this would also be carried out. "But I reject raising taxes as a method of balancing the budget, instead of cutting expenditure."

"That's not a nice thing to say," Aridor said that for all the importance of a trimmed budget, the budget deficit was not the only factor causing inflation. The linkage mechanisms could not be ignored. He explained why not in an instant lesson in economics:

"Devaluation raises prices. Price increases bring wage increases in their train. Wage increases raise costs and prices. Price increases bring about devaluation."

The term "dollarization" might not have been the happiest, but what's in a name, Aridor asked. Call it a currency stabilization plan, call it monetary reform, he said.

The plan called for a halt in the printing of money to cover government deficits and a realistic devaluation followed by stabilization of the exchange rate. Such a devaluation, accomplished in the framework of an overall plan, could be protected, because dollarization would bring inflation down to western levels, Aridor said.

Another element in the plan was a one-time wage erosion, except for the lowest income groups, of about 7 per cent, after which wages would be stable and protected. Since the currency would be stabilized there would be no need to raise the price of subsidized goods every few weeks.

The plan called for the abolition of all linkages, but there would be no need for linkage, since everything would be denominated in dollar terms: wages, prices, the budget and credit. New rules of the game, as practised in the West, would be adopted in the area of wages, too, Aridor said.

"In short," he said, "the plan could simultaneously have worked on inflation and on the balance of payments. And it could have been behind us already, since it was meant to be put into effect by the end of 1983."

One thing the plan did not include was the abolition of Israeli currency, Aridor said. There had been a discussion, never settled, as to whether the dollar would also be legal tender alongside the shekel.

In any case, after the plan had been introduced and proved successful, the shekel would have been replaced by a new Israeli currency, but that would have been a stable currency introduced into a stable economy.

Apart from the unfortunate label of "dollarization," Aridor thought that the plan did not catch on because "here people don't like innovations — innovations must come from Iceland."

In addition, Aridor said, he had been a victim of personal incitement and character assassination. "They accused me of arrogance. I was alone. But being alone is not arrogance. Being alone is the fate of he who does not follow the beaten path."

But, he concluded, if not dollarization, what then? If the Likud did not adopt the plan, the Alignment would.

The debate continues.

'Purim Squad' seeks deadly holiday gear

By AARON SITTNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Seeking to avert what it calls "a possible holiday catastrophe," the Ministry of Industry and Trade this week launched a nationwide campaign aimed at keeping fireworks and dangerous costumes out of the hands of children celebrating Purim. The festival occurs on Saturday night and Sunday, March 17 and 18 (Shushan Purim is on the 18th and 19th).

"A little child wearing a celluloid mask, a flammable fibre wig or bear and a crepe-paper costume, rubbing against a person holding a cigarette could be caught in a death trap," a ministry spokesman told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

To avert possible holiday catastrophes, the ministry began a crackdown on unscrupulous importers who bring in merchandise in violation of customs regulations or not in compliance with norms set by the Israel Standards Institute.

"As for firecrackers, Roman candles and similar powder or gel-activated fireworks, it should be noted that their use is permitted only by organizations and institutions, but not by individuals," he added.

Working with customs inspectors, police and municipal workers from several cities, the ministry's "Purim Safety Squad" has already confiscated thousands of flammable masks and costumes — mainly originating in the Far East — and large quantities of fireworks.

While the customs men shift from random to thorough inspections at ports of entry and warehouses, other law-enforcement officials are scouring retail outlets to make sure that last year's merchandise, which may have eluded detection, is not being offered for sale.

The Education Ministry has begun its own campaign of advising children in schools against using the dangerous Purim props.

With a health hazard also lurking in the use of sneezing powder, tear drops and tiny cigarette bombs, the ministry spokesman said: "There are plenty of safe costumes and ear-splitting noisemakers available in shops to make this a happy Purim. But for a few hours of fun it does not make sense to let unsuspecting children endanger their lives or health."

'Sharon played double game in Iran'

By ASHER WALLFISH
Post Knesset Correspondent

Mapam MK Yair Tsaban charged yesterday that former defence minister Ariel Sharon was in contact with senior Iranian generals in the late Shah's army, while at the same time selling weapons and military equipment to the Khomeini regime.

In a statement to the press, Tsaban said the motive of the royalist generals was to seek Israeli assistance in operations to undermine the revolutionary regime.

Tsaban, who issued the statement after the Knesset presidium refused to grant his request for an urgent plenum debate on Israeli arms sales to Iran and other countries, described the policy of the former defence minister as "cynical, adventurist and scheming."

Tsaban charged that Israel is selling weapons to Iran, even though Iranian fanatics are killing IDF soldiers in Lebanon.

He said the sub-committee on military industries of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee had only once received partial information about arms deals and was not routinely briefed, despite claims to the contrary, by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

Petition to demand nat'l traffic police

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A petition demanding the establishment of a national traffic police will be circulated by the National Council for the Prevention of Accidents next week, council officials announced at a press conference here yesterday (Tuesday).

Supreme Court Justice Dov Levin, chairman of the council, said police plans to increase its traffic force are meaningless because these personnel can easily be reassigned to other duties whenever they are needed. Radar traps and occasional police presence on the roads are not enough, he said.

An obvious and continuous police presence is essential to prevent drivers from breaking the law — not just occasional efforts to catch a few of those who have already committed offenses, Levin said.

"Knesset committees have urged the establishment of a national traffic police, and the police reluctantly agreed to work on it," Levin said. "We want to back them further into the corner by exerting public pressure through this petition."

Chief rabbis issue call for special prayers

Chief Rabbis Mordechai Eliahu and Avraham Shapira have called for the holding of special prayers tomorrow due to the "traffic accidents, serious illnesses, causeless hatred, terrible lapses in Shabbat observance and shortage of rain" of late.

The prayers will coincide with the eve of Rosh Hodesh Adar II. Worshippers are asked to recite Avinu Malkeinu during the morning service, along with Psalms 20, 25, 142, 145 and 130, in that order.

Heads of Arab schools take course in civics

Jerusalem Post Staff

Principals of Arab schools from around the country are this week completing a course sponsored by the Education and Culture Ministry on the subject of civics. The aim of the course is to find better ways to instill good citizenship values in Arab students in Israel.

The 15 principals who participated in the course agreed to convene again in a year's time to report on practical results of the programme.

Reagan to propose troop cuts in Europe

LOS ANGELES (AP). — President Ronald Reagan has tentatively agreed to a plan that could lead to an agreement with the Soviet Union to reduce troop levels in Eastern Europe, according to a report published yesterday.

Reagan will propose the plan March 16 during troop-reduction talks in Vienna and encourage the Soviets to return to the Geneva nuclear-arms talks, The Los Angeles Times reported, quoting unidentified U.S. officials.

The plan, which could eventually lead to a reduction in forces by both NATO and Warsaw Pact nations to equal levels, is being discussed with U.S. allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the newspaper said.

Under the proposal, the U.S. would not pursue the issue of how many troops Warsaw Pact nations have in Eastern Europe if the Soviet Union allows the U.S. to monitor the reduction with on-site inspections.

In addition, the newspaper reported, Reagan would repeat a previous U.S. offer to withdraw 13,000 American ground troops from Europe if the Soviets withdraw 30,000.

At the same time, the U.S. would accept the Soviets' offer to set up entry and exit posts at key points which would monitor troop movements into and out of the critical Central European theatre.

The Soviets have offered to withdraw 20,000 troops in exchange for the 13,000 Americans. But U.S. and West German officials want 30,000 Soviet troops withdrawn to compensate for the greater distance and time required to send U.S. forces across the Atlantic than for the Soviets to move less than 1,600 kilometres across land.

Asylum-seekers not related to premier, E. Germany says

BERLIN (AP). — East Germany denied yesterday that five East German asylum-seekers holed up inside the West German embassy in Czechoslovakia are related to Premier Willi Stoph.

But the unusual report by the official news agency ADN confirmed that an East German family was inside the Prague mission and acknowledged that Stoph was the wife's maiden name.

The report, titled An unsuitable attempt, broke the official silence surrounding the embassy drama, which began last Friday when the three adults and two children entered the embassy and refused to leave unless granted safe passage to the West.

The Bonn government on Saturday confirmed reports in the West

German media that the wife, Ingrid Berg, was the niece of Stoph, No. 2 in the East German leadership.

ADN said that "Hans-Dieter Berg, along with his family, is currently a guest of the West German Embassy in Prague."

The agency said it was informed by "competent authorities" that the Berg family "has no relations at all to Premier Willi Stoph contrary to claims."

ADN carried a lengthy description of Berg's "very eventful life," saying Ingrid Berg "nee Stoph" is his second wife.

ADN also carried a statement from Stoph's office, the Council of State, which labelled the West German media reports about the affair "a campaign of slander" against the premier.

Gandhi condemns extremists as Sikh protests continue

NEW DELHI. — More than 75 Sikh militants were jailed in Punjab State for burning part of the Indian constitution yesterday as the prime minister denounced use of the historic Golden Temple as an arsenal and criminals sanctuary.

"Our fight today is against this type of extremism," Indira Gandhi told parliament.

Opposition legislators accused Gandhi of following a "policy of drift" and taking no concrete action to end the Punjab crisis and halt escalating Sikh terrorism.

"Mrs. Gandhi should govern or should resign," declared former foreign minister Atal Vajpayee.

The prime minister criticized militants operating from the Golden Temple in the Sikh holy city of Amritsar for "putting people on the hit list and shooting them one by one."

"The question is whether we should enter the Golden Temple or not, and this is something which we cannot discuss here," she told the ruling lower house.

Sikh militants have threatened a blood bath if police raided the 17th-century shrine, called "golden" because of its gilded copper finish.

The 75 militants were arrested under India's 1971 Insult To National Honour Act, which prescribes a maximum sentence of three years.

Sikh militants in batches of five to seven staged the constitution-burning demonstrations yesterday outside district courts in Amritsar and five other Punjab cities — Patiala, Sangrur, Ropar, Faridkot and Ludhiana, state officials said.

Nine Sikh leaders were jailed Monday in the Indian capital and in Chandigarh, joint capital of Punjab and Haryana states, for defiling the constitution.

Security forces have been on high alert since clashes broke out two weeks ago between Sikh and Hindu extremists over Sikh demands for religious and political concessions in Punjab, where most of India's 12 million Sikhs live.

During the fighting nearly 70 people have died and about 300 have been injured.

Rebels attack Soviet Embassy in Kabul

ISLAMABAD (AP). — The Soviet Embassy in Kabul was rocketed for the second time this month as Moslem rebels orchestrated attacks on military targets to mark the fourth anniversary of the so-called Kabul uprising in Afghanistan, western diplomatic sources here said yesterday.

In what was described as a "well coordinated" series of attacks on February 20, guerrillas also rocketed the Soviet garrison command headquarters at Darul Aman near the Defence Ministry and a Soviet-built grain silo, according to a report from Kabul.

Insurgents also shelled and burned at least four police posts in the area and planted mines that destroyed about half a dozen troop carriers near a Soviet-built complex that houses senior government and Soviet officials, the sources said.

The attacks apparently caused little, if any damage, but the sources said there were unconfirmed reports that the Soviet Embassy compound received a direct hit that caused fire to rage for about 30 minutes.

They said Soviet troops responded to the attack on the embassy with rocket fire that destroyed several nearby houses but reportedly caused few casualties.

Stepped up guerrilla activity coincided with the anniversary of protests in Kabul four years ago against Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. The diplomats said those were "bloodily suppressed" by Soviet troops and helicopter gunships.

Salvadoran rebels blow up train

SAN SALVADOR (AP). — Leftist guerrillas blew up a bridge Monday night, sending parts of a passenger freight train crashing into a ravine and then spraying survivors with machine gun fire, a Salvadoran army officer said.

He said at least 18 security policemen aboard the train and an undetermined number of civilians were killed, and an undetermined number of passengers were injured.

Col. Jaime Flores, head of the Salvadoran Army 1st Brigade, said the train was en route from Metapan to San Salvador, 111 kilometres to the northwest. He said the incident occurred about 80 km. north of the capital in a sugar-growing area where the guerrillas are fairly strong.

"Eighteen of the 20 Treasury Police on board were killed or wounded as well as an unknown number of civilians," Flores said. "It was a civilian train. The military has no trains."

The Treasury-Police routinely ride trains for security in this Central American nation, torn by a four-year-old civil war.

Airport closed after 60 die in riots

LAGOS (Reuters). — The airport of the northeastern Nigerian city of Yola was closed to all flights, and motorists entering and leaving the city were searched after more than 60 people were reported killed in riots there on Monday.

A film, broadcast by state-run television late Monday night, showed burning buildings and pavements strewn with bodies.

It showed bodies of people allegedly hacked to death by rioters thought to be followers of a fundamentalist Moslem, Muhammadu Marwa Maitatsine, who died in riots three years ago.

Parliamentary police battled all day to quell the unrest, while army units were on standby in case the police needed reinforcement, the television said. Three policemen were among those reported killed.

Sen. Hollings triumphs in Dixville Notch

DIXVILLE NOTCH, New Hampshire (AP). — U.S. Senator Ernest Hollings, one of eight major Democratic presidential contenders, won the vote in Dixville Notch yesterday as its 27 voters cast the nation's first presidential ballots of 1984.

Among Democrats casting the votes in the New Hampshire primary at midnight, Hollings received three votes. Former vice-president Walter Mondale had two votes, while Senator Gary Hart of Colorado and former Florida governor Reubin Askew had one each.

Continuing its quadrennial tradition, the sparsely populated mountain hamlet cast its votes in the New Hampshire primary just after midnight, making its votes the first results reported.

Every president since Dwight Eisenhower has won in his party's primary in New Hampshire.

Most of New Hampshire's voting polls were to open at 7 a.m. and to close at 6 p.m., with stations in all 298 precincts to close by 8 p.m. The first substantial results were expected at 4 a.m. today Israel time.

Man gets 461 years plus life for 17 murders

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (Reuters). — A local businessman will spend the rest of his life in prison for killing 17 prostitutes and topless dancers.

Robert Hansen, 45, confessed in court yesterday that he murdered the women over a 10-year period starting in 1973 and dumped their bodies in the Alaska wilderness.

Hansen, owner of an Anchorage bakery, was sentenced in Superior Court to 461 years plus life without possibility of a parole.

Hansen pleaded guilty to the first degree murder of four women whose bodies have been found.

He agreed to help investigators locate the remains of the 13. At the time of his confession, Hansen was in jail on charges of kidnapping and raping a 17-year-old prostitute.

Her allegations after her escape sparked renewed investigations into the disappearances of more than a dozen women from bars and clubs.

The prostitute who escaped from Hansen said he raped her several times and then chained her to a post while he slept for several hours. She escaped as he tried to put her into an airplane to fly her out to the wilderness.

Aviation experts release report on downed airliner: 'USSR didn't try to identify Korean plane'

MONTREAL (Reuters). — The Soviet Union made no attempt to identify a straying South Korean airliner before shooting it down last September with the loss of 269 lives, a team of UN aviation experts said on Monday.

Soviet fighters sent up to intercept the plane also failed to position themselves alongside so that the South Korean pilot could see them clearly, the report from the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) said.

ICAO's air navigation commission said: "There is no evidence of any attempt to identify the aircraft."

The commission, basing its conclusions on air-to-ground communication records, said these gave no clear indication that the intercepting aircraft had positioned itself within view of the pilot of the airliner.

"It is of paramount importance for the intercepting aircraft to ensure that it attracts the attention of the pilot-in-command of the civil aircraft," it said.

Monday's report was basically the commission's comments on the findings of an ICAO investigation team that visited the Soviet Union late last year.

The commission said it was difficult to validate or endorse a theory of the investigating team that the

Avalanches claim five lives in Austria on weekend

VIENNA (AP). — Avalanches killed five people in western Austria during the weekend, police reported.

On Monday, a group of students was hit by a snowslide near Liezen, Styria province. While several skiers freed themselves or were dug out by rescuers, a 20-year-old woman was retrieved in critical condition and died in hospital, officials said.

Eastern half of U.S. socked by high winds, heavy snow

NEW YORK (AP). — Storms fuelled by 80 kilometres per hour winds savaged the eastern U.S. yesterday, smothering the area in up to 53 centimetres of wet snow and causing turmoil on interstate highways clogged with drifts and abandoned vehicles.

Chunks of ice stacking up two metres high crashed into beachfront homes on Lower Michigan's Lake Huron.

Snow fell at the rate of 5 centimetres an hour in western Pennsylvania and New York, where on law enforcement official said rescuers had to "bang through the drifts" to reach stranded motorists.

Heavy thunderstorms and tornadoes whipped across Florida Monday — uprooting trees, destroying mobile homes and downing power lines.

Adulterous couple sentenced to death by stoning

ABU DHABI (Reuters). — An Indian man and a Sri Lankan woman have been sentenced to be stoned to death after being convicted of committing adultery, a prosecutor in a town 160 kilometres east of here said yesterday.

He said the man, identified only as Kondela, 27, and the now-pregnant woman, Shahila, 25, had admitted having sexual intercourse several times.

The sentence by the Islamic sharia court has to be ratified by the chief sharia justice and the head of state.

Under Islamic law, the two face death by stoning for adultery. They would have received 100 lashes each if they had been unmarried, the prosecutor said.

He said that if the sentence were approved, the woman would be allowed time to deliver and feed her baby if no other woman could be found to feed the child.

Second man charged in UK slaying of Indian diplomat

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP). — A second man has been charged with kidnapping Indian diplomat Ravindra Mhatre, who was found shot to death three weeks ago, police said yesterday.

The suspect was to be arraigned later in the day at a hearing in which Abdul Quayyum Raja, a 27-year-old Kashmiri charged on Saturday, was also to appear, a police spokesman said.

In Saturday's appearance in this northwest England city, Raja was not asked to plead and no application for bail was made.

Mhatre, 48, was assistant commissioner at the Indian consulate in Birmingham. His body was found on February 5 on a farm near Hinkley, 48 kilometres northeast of Birmingham.

Swedish Navy lobs grenades in search for alien subs

STOCKHOLM (AP). — The Swedish Navy hurled hand grenades and fired machinegun bullets into the water Monday in the 18th day of operations against suspected alien submarines and divers inside a secret naval base.

The action followed detonation of "a relatively heavy explosive charge" late Sunday night in the Karlskrona archipelago of southeastern Sweden, said Jan-Ake Berg, a defence staff press officer. Press reports said the charge was detonated in the entrance channel to Karlskrona harbour.

The search area is only a few kilometres from the spot where the Soviet Whiskey class submarine U-137, which the Swedes say probably was carrying nuclear-tipped torpedoes, ran aground in October 1982.

Cairo U. students demonstrate against campus police

CAIRO (AP). — Several hundred Cairo University students yesterday demonstrated peacefully on campus for the fourth time this month for the removal of campus police.

Amr Adib, a mass-communications junior, said the demonstrations were in protest over an incident Monday when a dean allegedly struck a student who tried to stop him from pulling down a banner.

The students claim the police have gone beyond providing security and now have a veto over any student activity, from approvals for cultural and sports events to deciding who can speak publicly.

The students started demonstrating last Tuesday, and they say they will continue until their demands are met.

Egyptian border police seize $7.5 million worth of drugs

CAIRO (Reuters). — Egyptian frontier forces recently seized narcotics worth $7.5 million, the semi-official daily newspaper Al-Ahram reported.

The unspecified drugs, brought from Lebanon, were impounded in an ambush at Maryut Lake near Egypt's Mediterranean coast, and 40 smugglers were arrested, Al-Ahram said in today's edition.

British workers hold one-day walkout

LONDON (AP). — Thousands of British workers staged a one-day strike yesterday to protest against Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's union ban at a government spy centre.

The so-called "Day of Action" protest, backed by Britain's 11.5-million member Trades Union Congress, was called to protest against the banning of union membership at the government communications headquarters in Cheltenham. The ban becomes effective tomorrow.

It was to have been a half-day protest, allowing workers to attend more than 100 rallies nationwide.

But many elected to take the whole day off.

The stoppages began before dawn when engineers, conductors, and newspaper loaders left their jobs at London's Paddington Station, halting delivery of London papers to western England.

The stoppage quickly spread to other British rail terminals. By mid-morning, officials said 70 per cent of all services were either delayed or cancelled.

In the northwest port of Liverpool, bus drivers went on strike, stranding thousands of commuters.

Rome synagogue suspect jailed in Greece

ATHENS (AP). — A criminal court on Monday handed down a 20-month jail sentence to a Jordanian student who is sought by Italian police for alleged involvement in a bloody attack on Rome's main synagogue two years ago, a court spokesman said.

Abdel Osama al-Zomor, 23, who has already spent 15 months in jail since his arrest, was found guilty of illegal possession of explosives, the spokesman said.

The five-member court dropped criminal charges of smuggling after al-Zomor claimed the explosives were intended for the Palestinian Liberation Organization and not for terrorist attacks in Greece.

Italy last year demanded al-Zomor's extradition on charges of complicity in the handgrenade attack by five men at the Rome synagogue in October 1982, which killed a 2-year-old boy and injured 32 people.

Tennis rankings

By JACK LEON
Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Israelis Amos Mansdorf and Shahar Perkis are bracketed together in 770th place in the latest Association of Tennis Professionals singles rankings, which include a total of some 1,200 players.

Shlomo Glickstein is 38th in the standings, but he will climb to between 30th and 35th place in the next list by virtue of reaching the quarter-finals in the $250,000 Grand Prix in La Quinta, California, a fortnight ago.

Glickstein was $99,864 in prize money in ATP competition last year, about $300 less than in 1982. The final 1983 table of the Prize Money Board — which extended to last January to include the Volvo Grand Masters — is headed by Czechoslovak's Ivan Lendl, with $1,747,132.

American John McEnroe and Mats Wilander of Sweden follow Lendl in turn, each with earnings of about $600,000 less than the Czech ace.

Zola won't wed to win Olympics

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP). — A former British marathon runner who offered to marry South African teen-age track star Zola Budd to give her British citizenship and a chance of Olympic glory has been turned down by the 17-year-old runner.

Henry Allen, a 65-year-old widower from Hopwood near Birmingham, proposed to Budd to enable her to take up British citizenship. As a South African, she is barred from all international competition, including the Olympic Games.

Commenting in Stellenbosch, South Africa, on January 5, Budd suggested Mr. Decker's offer was "a bit silly" because of her nationality, her time of 15:08.85 will not count and the American's record of 15:02.25 will still stand as the world's official best time.

Budd, from Bloemfontein, is in her first year at university studying to become a teacher.

Her refusal to take up Allen's offer of marriage was quoted in Birmingham's Evening Mail newspaper.

"Naturally, I was not thinking of marriage in the true sense of the word," said Allen. "I just wanted to help her sporting career."

Newsweek kayos Pep

NEW YORK (AP). — Willie Pep won almost every match he fought while he was the world's best featherweight boxer during the 1940s, but now he has lost a big one, a lawsuit to prove he did not throw a controversial fight 30 years ago.

After a two-week trial, the jury made its decision Monday following 15 minutes of deliberation. The verdict: Pep did not throw the fight.

The article in a magazine article that said he threw a February 26, 1954 fight against Luis Perez.

Pep, now 61 and still trim, is a former world featherweight champion, who won 229 fights, lost just 11 and drew one.

His last fight, a 1975, was in Federal Court here charging he had been bribed to lose a July 1961 article about "The Fix" in Inside Sports magazine, then published by Newsweek, incorporated.

The article did not mention Pep's name — it talked about "The Fix" — but he testified he knew right away it was about his fight with Perez. He denied throwing the fight.

In order to win his case, Pep needed to prove by "clear and convincing evidence" that the magazine article was false and written with malice. The jury never had to rule on the malice question.

Moses is tops

INDIANAPOLIS (AP). — World champion hurdler Edwin Moses was named winner on Monday of 1983's James E. Sullivan Memorial award for the top U.S. amateur athlete.

Moses, 28, of California, was selected by 16 finalists in a vote-wide voting by more than 2,400 people, including past winners, journalists, the U.S. Olympic Committee Executive Board, and the sponsoring Amateur Athletic Union.

Moses, who won an Olympic gold medal in 1976, has set together a streak of 11 consecutive victories in the 400m. hurdles, including the world record of 47.02, that he says he hopes to continue until it tops the century mark.

In the wake of events recently witnessed in our country, we now suffer drought, the scourge of road accidents, an increase in serious disease unseen for generations, senseless hatred, dissension, and outrageous desecration of the Sabbath. These things renew our awareness of the need to repent, to raise an outcry, and to pray. Accordingly, we issue a call for increased participation in the services preceding Rosh Hodesh, on Thursday, Adar A 27. Avinu Malkenu and Psalms 20, 25, 132, 143 and 130 should be added to Shaharit and Mincha services.

Front-line avant-garde

By ELI KAREV/Special to The Jerusalem Post

MUSIC HISTORIANS of the future may find it worth their while to consider the striking role played by Hungarian expatriates — quite a few among them of Jewish stock — in this century's musical life. Imagine the scene, without Sir Georg Solti, Eugene Ormandy, Louis Kentner, George Szell, Ilona Kabos, Joseph Szigeti, and so on. Tzadik's musical culture, too, was nurtured from the cradle by Hungarian immigrants — Oedon Paros, Ilona Vincze, Ilona Feher, Lorand and Alice Fenyves.

György Ligeti, who at 61 represents the younger generation, left Hungary in 1956 to become an acknowledged leader of the international musical avant-garde. His current visit to Israel has occasioned a veritable Ligeti festival — everything but name, what with universities, music academies, performing bodies and concert series, including one another in featuring the music of Ligeti, lectures by Ligeti, colloquia with Ligeti.

On his third day in Jerusalem, Ligeti appears tired but happy. The telephone in his Mishkenot Sha'ananim apartment rings constantly. "I barely got off the plane, and it began. So many good friends here," he smiles by way of apology, and some I haven't seen for 30 years.

Ligeti's first composition saw light when he was 18. Called "Kin-heret," the song was based on a text by Rafei. "I was in the Hahonim youth movement in Transylvania, and we were meant to come here. But fate willed differently."

The song was the youth's winning entry in a Jewish musical competition which, incongruously, was prompted by the isolation forced on Jewish activity in Hungary. Ligeti remained in that country, composing fairly conventional works. "From the early fifties, though, I carried quite different music in my imagination. I was after long, static sound clusters, with no melody and rhythm to speak of. What I lacked was the technical know-how to realize and implement my vision."

After 1956, the modern musical language of the West provided the tools, and his Articulation, Apparitions, and Atmospheres produced a stir, propelling Ligeti into the front line of the avant-garde.

While acknowledging his fascination with the ideas of Boulez, Stockhausen and Koenig, Ligeti does not see himself as a bona fide avant-gardist. "I did belong to the serialist movement, but not that much, really. Avant-garde, with the military roots of the term, means to be closed, fighting group; my purpose was to break through the walls of it and to write music which was really my own. Anyway, the term has lost much of its potency today."

LIGETI'S STYLE has not remained static. "When I feel that what I do turns into a cliché — I change. To me, style is something that flows, transforms. It depends on so many factors, not least on the ideas, politics and culture that surround us."

He wants, however, to be a very complicated and complex composer. In his musical language, Ligeti continues to search for "very rich fabric, transparent, multi-colored texture, with an important role reserved for harmony — albeit not of the tonal type."

He is excited about the possibilities offered by the micro-intervals as well as by some elements of the ethno-musicological research. "Did you hear the Ethiopian monks sing?" Ligeti says, his grey eyes lighting up with excitement. "They are stunning: such melodic line with hidden polyphony in it. I ran into them today, by chance; it is a must!"

This is Ligeti's first professional visit to Israel (he has been here once privately). Invited by the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra and by Albert Wassener, the director of the Goethe Institute in Israel, he is to attend musical events for two weeks, after which he plans to stay on privately with his wife and son, meeting friends and seeing the country.

Is Ligeti concerned with the accessibility of his music to the general public? "My music can be approached on two levels," he says. "On the more emotional level, one can relate to it without understanding the process — just like relating to a speech in a strange language. It is not as incomprehensible as it may seem; the emotional content can be quite obvious. The more advanced listener can also understand what goes on — not how I write, this is quite unimportant, but the inner logic of the composition. I think in this respect my works are not much more difficult than music by past composers. The late Beethoven quartets, for one, are very difficult, although they are tonal. Of course, I do not write for amusement, but my music is not all that hard either."

SINCE 1956, Ligeti has made three visits to Hungary. They perform him there nowadays, as they do many contemporary Westerners. Obviously not excommunicated, Ligeti is seen and treated in Hungary as somebody who was born but does not belong there. "I belong nowhere: a Hungarian Jew, an Austrian citizen, and a professor in Germany. Perhaps I want it that way," he adds after a moment's reflection.

György Ligeti: "When I feel that what I do turns into a cliché — I change." (Aliza Auerbach)

György Ligeti places great hope in such scientific developments as the computer and artificial intelligence. The direct application of technology to music is of little interest to him; however, just as his complex polyphony would not have been possible without his knowledge of, and experience in, the electronic processes, so a completely new way of thinking may be stimulated by the scientific advances. "But it is just a belief, of course."

What message does his music carry? "The message of my music is the message of art. I do not compose for educational or social purpose, and certainly not in order to be successful. For me, doing the thing is more important than what people think of it."

IT HAS BEEN 17 years since I graduated, but I still cannot wear a necktie without thinking of Yeshivat Ramaz.

Ramaz, which tonight holds a reunion for its Israeli alumni at Beit Ariel in Jerusalem, had its pretensions in those days, when America was changing. It adopted a dress code just when long hair and sloppy clothing were becoming the uniform of an American generation. I can recall that at least one member of my Class of 1967 was forced to get a haircut in order to graduate.

I was uncomfortable entering Ramaz in 1958. It was considered a Jewish prep school, both "rich" and "religious," an awesome mix for the son of working-class Yiddish-speaking parents from the Bronx.

But I soon discovered that Ramaz was Orthodox only after a fashion, and that I was not the only one who removed my kippa when leaving the school building. Many of my classmates struggled with the mincha prayers, and some of them introduced me to the pleasures of the pizza parlour around the corner, dubbed glatt treif by the school administration.

The curriculum included Talmud, Chumash and modern Hebrew literature. The school was Zionist and I recall the time it went over from ashkenazi to sephardi pronunciation (emes to emet). We pondered the fate of the egg that was laid on a holiday and read Aharon Meged. We were also expected to do well in the general studies programme and get into the right schools. A curious combination altogether of traditional and modern elements.

Looking back in fondness

By DAVID TWERSKY
Special to The Jerusalem Post

The teachers were a mixed lot: some genuine scholars, always remembered with affection; some eccentrics, only appreciated too late. A French teacher had abandoned the public school system over a "loyalty oath." Years later we met on the subway in Brooklyn, and he defended the Stalin-Hitler pact to me. There was an ex-Israeli who complained bitterly about Israel, and the maskil, who combined a commitment to the labyrinthine passageways of Hebrew grammar with a love of Hebrew literature and of the human spirit.

WE HAD to hit those books, and pass exams which tested our grasp of Robert Frost and Rav Ahi, Agnon and Cicero, negative numbers and Rambam. Endless dikduk tests, Latin conjugations, recitals of Walt Whitman's "O Captain, My Captain" and Bialik's "City of Slaughter."

But we also had our all-American "jock" side. Ramaz had a basketball team in the IV League (Inter-Yeshiva) and actually won the championship in 1964 in double overtime at Madison Square Garden.

How well did Ramaz prepare us for the world? That world was itself changing, even as we thought we were finally ready to take it on. Even if the destination remained a secret, Ramaz equipped us for the journey with an in-depth appreciation of Jewish sources. It exposed us to both classical and modern general culture. During a transit system strike in 1966, I couldn't get to school, and attended a local public high school for a week. I found it no less intelligent or broad-minded; but no more so.

The education Ramaz offered, its combination of depth and breadth, earned the scorn of more traditional talmudic academies; but it was an educational and philosophical statement about our ability to flourish in two cultures, one that needs to be expanded on and defended, both to those who would turn their backs on the past and those who close their eyes to the future.

Daring choices

MUSIC

VICTOR DEREVIANKO, pianist. (Tel Aviv Museum, February 25) Beethoven: Sonata opus 10, No. 3; Schumann: Symphonic Etudes; Prokofiev: Sonata No. 8, Opus 84.

IMPROBABLE as this might seem, the piano sonatas by Beethoven — perhaps the most celebrated collection in music literature — include some works that hardly ever make it to the concert stage. One such is the Sonata Opus 7, strikingly romantic, it is pianistic, challenging and virtually unknown. Nor can Prokofiev's Eighth Sonata be counted among performers' favorites; lacking as it does the immediate effectiveness of its famous predecessor, the seventh. A long, epic composition, it is permeated by brooding reflection, with the sardonic last movement putting the overall lack of cheer into even starker relief.

Victor Derevianko deserves full credit for these unconventional and rewarding choices. His playing, similarly, reflected a serious, dedicated attitude. A champion of broad, painterly strokes and dim sonorities, the pianist was at his best when pondering the dark mysteries of the Beethoven slow movement and dealing with the bitter-sweet poignancy of the Prokofiev. Sonorous upheavals in the music were kept under steady technical and intellectual control.

In the less exalted passages, however, Derevianko's sound lacked the bright energy necessary to transmit the minute changes of colour and melody shape. The dynamic developments could become two-dimensional, the volume fluctuating from the soft to the loud in a repetitive pattern. This regularity made the 17 pieces of Schumann's Symphonic Etudes sound rather too much like one another. The rhythmic flexibility, while often appropriate and convincing, verged on exaggeration in the Beethoven.

Since the sound quality remains the all-important component of a music performance, the unhelpful — not to say detrimental — role of the instrument in the Kaufman auditorium must be noted. That piano recitals in Tel Aviv should take place under such adverse conditions is indefensible.

ELI KAREV

MOTTI SCHMITT, violin, with Daniel Ben-Zukim at the piano (YMCA Auditorium, Jerusalem, February 23, Mendelssohn: Theme & Variations (1932); Schumann: Sonata, in A minor (1828); Weber: Four Pieces, Opus 7 (1916); Beethoven: Sonata No. 4, in A minor, Opus 23 (1806); Prokofiev: three Miniatures (1959); Dvorak: Kol Nidrei (1975); Shostakovich: Preludes.

THIS PROGRAMME stood out for originality, contrasting rather unknown 20th century music with classics; and rounding it off was an Israeli composition.

The performances demonstrated Motti Schmitt's curiosity about out-of-the-way compositions and his easy grasp of peculiarities inherent in the styles of the various and widely varying composers chosen. His technical facilities serve him well in all situations, and his musicality provides emotional and intelligent substance to his interpretations.

Daniel Ben-Zukim collaborated most effectively with the violinist and contributed fluent pianistic and restrained dynamics to the team.

Dorfmann's "Kol Nidrei," for violin solo, is a mixture of the traditional liturgical melos and elaborate meditations on the prayer's connotations, often leading to violinistic extravaganzas, bordering on brilliant concert passages. But one cannot judge from a one-time performance how much is the composer's and what the soloist added, given leeway by the composer for aleatoric freedom.

The rather great length seems to weaken its impact, and the device to let the violinist occasionally pronounce words from the prayer over the music may sound more like a gimmick than adding to the music's content. Motti Schmitt's obvious dedication to his task of serving the composer's intentions serves as further proof of his sincerity and devotion in the service of music. Further recitals of this sort would be most welcome though a more intimate venue would surely enhance the emotional experience and enrichment of an audience.

Dimona pulling out of slump with new factories and stores

By LIOA MORIEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

DIMONA. — After a five-year slump, Dimona's population figures for 1983 showed that 200 more people arrived than left this Negev town. Mayor Eli Hillel said yesterday. With three sophisticated new plants now under construction, he is optimistic that Dimona is on the road to economic recovery.

Hillel said that a new industrial park being put up by the Defence Ministry near the Nuclear Research Centre would provide some 100 technological jobs this year.

"Menahem Maron, director of the Defence Ministry, gave me assurances that the ministry will not only encourage defence plants to locate in Dimona, but also advise military personnel to live here with their families," he said.

The town yesterday also saw the opening of a new Shekem store, which is four times larger than the previous one in operation since 1966. Not far from the central bus station, it is strategically located near the proposed site of a new business centre and city hall.

Twenty new workers will join the 30 employed by the old store. Manager Moshe Libarti, a long-time resident of Dimona, will continue in his job.

"Moshe and I went to school here together," Mayor Hillel told the hundreds of people gathered for the festive opening. "Little by little, Dimona's first graduates are taking their place at the helm of the city."

With modern facilities, piped-in music, and a large variety of departments, it is expected that those who have access to the Shekem discount booklets will not longer go shopping in Beersheba, 35 kilometres away.

On his visit here last month, Arye Dulzin, chairman of the Jewish Agency, gave the town $250,000 to expand its cultural centre. Another project is to build an 800-seat concert hall.

Dulzin also promised to persuade the Jewish community of Geneva to open its hearts and pocketbooks to Dimona's Project Renewal neighbourhood. After initial enthusiasms, Hillel said, the Geneva community has not kept up its promised funding.

Sheraton ready to break cartel of hotel union

By MICHAEL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Sheraton hotels in Israel have refused to join what they term the "restrictive business practice" imposed by the Israel Hotel Association, and if pressured to adopt the practice, will leave the association. Sheraton area manager Per Kjellstrom said yesterday. "I have heard of maximum hotel prices being imposed, but never of minimum prices," Kjellstrom noted that the restrictive practice, which limits the reductions hotels may give, violates U.S. anti-trust laws, to which Sheraton adheres.

Kjellstrom spoke at a press conference marking the opening of the Sheraton Towers in the four upper floors of the Tel Aviv Sheraton. Consisting of 72 rooms, the Sheraton Towers offer improved luxury services, especially designed for business people, for $120 dollars a couple per day.

A computer system developed in Israel and used for the first time at the Sheraton Towers, consists of a remote-control panel near the bed, by which the guest can control the air conditioning, television, lighting, radio and message service.

Other services at the Sheraton Towers include a special reception area, where the arriving guest can sip champagne, with hostesses providing flight and tour information, and business, telex and translation services.

Every room in the Sheraton Towers is occupied now, while the general hotel occupancy is 88 per cent.

Haifa country club ready 15 months ahead of schedule

By DAVID RUDGE
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — The first phase of a $5.5 million country club project in Neveh Sha'anun, will be opened by the end of June — just nine months after work began and 15 months ahead of schedule, the developers, Nofesh Pail, said yesterday.

Already Haifaites are lining up to become members of the club, which will provide a wide range of facilities, including an ice skating rink, reportedly the first of its kind in the country.

The country club which covers a 52-dunam plot near Derech Ya'acov Dori, will be the most modern and luxurious in Israel, Nofesh Pail chairman and general manager Uri Heilbronn told The Jerusalem Post.

The ice skating rink can be used as a multi-purpose court for roller skating and basketball. The first phase will also include a swimming pool and an adjoining children's pool, water slides, health club, gymnasium, and a cafe, as well as nine tennis courts.

The developers are using an ingenious system whereby machines used to heat the water in the swimming pool during the winter will also freeze water on the multi-purpose court to turn it into a skating rink.

Heilbronn said that originally the first stage had been planned on a much smaller scale, and his company had estimated the work would take at least two years. Instead, it would take just nine months and in addition to the sports facilities, all parking and access roads would be completed.

He said the second stage of the project would be the erection of the main building with its cafe, disco, community hall, ten-pin bowling alley, rifle range, shops and offices. A camping and caravan area is also planned.

Heilbronn said that Haifa was the only large town without its own country club. "The city has needed something like this for the past 30 years."

The price for membership is $700 for a family for a year, $1,050 for two years, $3,000 for five years and $4,500 for ten years.

'Artificial intelligence' focus of technology meeting

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — "The next decade in computers" — with specific emphasis on "artificial intelligence" — will be the theme of the Fourth Jerusalem Conference on Information and Technology, to be held during the week of May 21.

"Artificial intelligence is the next great step forward in computer science," said Prof. Yosef Raviv of the IBM Israel Scientific Centre, who is one of the conference chairmen.

He envisages that within the next decade computers will be designed which not only operate robots, but will also be able to see, go and find materials in a warehouse, and who will do such monotonous work as reading the addresses on letters and delivering mail to individual households.

They will even take care of bed-ridden persons, bringing them food and opening and closing windows. But much more important, they will be able to read X-rays and ultrasound examinations, and help the physician interpret the findings. "The possibilities of robots run by computers with 'artificial intelligence' are almost without limit," he said.

Some 2,000 persons, including about 400 from abroad, will attend the conference. Most of the guests, who are coming both to lecture and as participants, are from Europe and North America, although there will be a delegation from Japan.

One Russian scientist, H. Kilov, has sent a scientific paper, and it is hoped that he will appear in person to read it. (The paper is in English.)

Other details were given by Israel Borovits, of Tel Aviv University, and Amiram Shore, of MLI Software and Computer Industries, of Israel.

The conference is under the auspices of Prof. Yuval Ne'eman, Minister of Science and Development. It will be held simultaneously with the Economic Conference and with the Israel Technology Trade Fair — Isratech, and in conjunction with the 19th National Conference of the Information Processing Association of Israel.

Central gas billing to be reviewed

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Knesset Economic Committee yesterday concluded that the new regulations for billing users of central gas systems should be changed.

The regulations issued by the Energy Ministry went into effect with this month's gas bills, which jumped considerably for most customers. The new regulations allow the gas companies to charge customers a large advance on current consumption, in addition to the regular charges for the previous two-month billing period.

The chairman of the Economic Committee, Alignment MK Gad

Ya'acobi, summed up the discussion by saying that there is no justification for making the customers pay the cost of maintaining the inventory in central gas systems, as they are forced to do under the regulations.

The Energy Ministry announced yesterday that a joint panel of ministry officials and experts appointed by consumer organizations will shortly complete a review of the new billing procedure. Ministry director-general Uriel Lynn said that the next bill would be lower than the present one, since the large advances paid now would be deducted from the next bill.

British oil production at record high

LONDON (AP). — British North Sea oil production has reached a record rate of more than 2.6 million barrels a day and is earning at a rate of above $630 ($913) a second, says a report published yesterday by the Royal Bank of Scotland.

The government's share, in taxes and royalties, is more than $900 million ($1.3 billion) a month.

It shows that for the third consecutive month oil output reached a new record in January with an average daily production of more than 2.6 million barrels — a rise of 21 per cent over the January level last year.

The bank's monthly index of North Sea production, which stood at just under 158 in December, hit 159 in January. The index is based on a figure of 100 for 1980, when Britain reached self-sufficiency in oil.

Finance & Trade Bank profit up 111%

By JOSEPH MORGENTHAU
Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Finance and Trade Bank, a member of the United Mizrahi Bank group, recently announced its profit and loss statement for the year ending December 31, 1983. The report showed a net profit which advanced by a nominal 480 per cent and stood at $157.4 million. After taking inflation into account this is a real gain of 111 per cent.

The consolidated balance sheet totalled $14.65 billion, compared with $11.3b. in 1982 and marked a nominal growth of 386 per cent, or a real growth of 77 per cent. In dollar terms the balance sheet total came to $60m., compared with $40m. a year ago.

Expressed in dollars the profit was $5.3m., compared with $2.9m. the preceding year.

Net earnings per share on a fully-diluted basis rose from 112 per cent to 303 per cent in the current year, for a nominal growth of 171 per cent.

The bank paid an interim cash dividend on account of 1983 at a rate of 75 per cent, which totalled $13.12m. The interim dividend has been declared as final for 1983.

The bank's capital means stood at $179.8m., compared with $134.5m. the preceding year. Total deposits grew to $153.4b. and marked a real growth of 137 per cent. The bank has a staff of 45.

Canadian firm sells five planes to Egypt

TORONTO (AP). — The De Havilland Aircraft Company said Monday it has received a $44 million order for five Dash 7 models from Cairo-based Petroleum Air Services — the largest single order for the four-engine prop-jet in its 10-year history.

The deal brings to 97 the number of Dash 7s sold worldwide. De

Turkish banks allowed to open one-month time deposits

ISTANBUL (Reuters). — The Central Bank of Turkey will allow banks to offer one-month time deposits from tomorrow, a move apparently aimed at attracting savings and reducing inflation.

They said the Central Bank issued a decree, published in the official gazette over the weekend, allowing banks to pay interest monthly at an annualized rate of 43 per cent.

Iran threatens to restrict W. German imports

HAMBURG (Reuters). — Iran is threatening to place restrictions on imports from West Germany in an attempt to halt its spiralling trade deficit with the country, the German-Iranian Chamber of Commerce said yesterday.

The Iranian trade deficit with West Germany nearly quadrupled to 6.15 billion marks in 1983 from 1.66b. in 1982. At the same time German exports soared to 7.72b. marks from 3.40b. and Iranian exports fell to 1.57b. from 1.74b., the chamber said.

The Iranian authorities established a council last summer to examine applications for imports of West German goods to see if they could not be obtained domestically or elsewhere.

The Iranian government has urged West Germany to increase its imports from Iran, especially in the oil sector, to redress the imbalance, but has met with little response.

The threat of Iranian restrictions could have a serious impact on West German trade, since Iran is the second-largest overseas market for West German exports after the United States.

OIL PRICE. — Egypt increased the export price of three crude oil varieties by 25 cents.

Poultry breeding project for Gulf states

RIYADH (AP). — The six-nation Gulf Cooperation Council is in the process of creating the Middle East's first pure-line poultry breeding project, the newspaper Saudi Gazette reports.

The pure-line project would supply the Arab Gulf states with their own breed of parent stock for broiler chicken and would bring the region's poultry producers closer to self-sufficiency by eliminating their need to import parent chicken from European or North American breeders.

Boutique warriors

YESTERDAY'S bomb outrage in Jerusalem, coinciding with PLO chief Yasser Arafat's renewed dialogue with King Hussein in Amman, draws attention again to the nature of the PLO. It is very eager to pose as a legitimate national movement aspiring to achieve its goals through essentially political means. At the same time it is an unabashed terror organization that has no qualms about taking such targets as a Jaffa Road boutique.

In the mid-70's Chairman Arafat embarked on a diplomatic offensive against Israel that earned him increasing international acceptance as he distanced himself from the terror tactics of the late 60's and the early 70's. But this did not interfere with his employment of such supposedly legitimate means of "armed struggle" as firing rockets on Nahariya.

Moreover, Arafat did nothing to discipline the more radical elements within the PLO, headed by such as George Habash and Naef Hawatme, who remained committed to the old terror tactics, which continued unabated.

Yasser Arafat, while careful not to associate himself too closely with bloody acts of terror which might tarnish his emerging new image, nevertheless was just as careful not to condemn these acts or to take their authors to task for them. Last December, apparently eager to prove that he had not entirely lost the military option in the wake of the Lebanon debacle, Arafat rushed to claim credit for the bombing of bus No. 18 in Jerusalem, which he sought to present as an attack on a military target. He disavowed responsibility for it only when it became clear that the killing of women and children was counter-productive to his quest for respectability.

Authorship of yesterday's attack on the Jerusalem boutique has been claimed by Hawatme's Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — the same organization that was responsible for the outrage in Maalot in 1974.

Naef Hawatme has been one of Yasser Arafat's staunchest allies in the PLO power struggle that all but caused the Fatah chief's demise in Lebanon last year. For this reason it might have been expected that there would be some comment coming from Arafat this time either disavowing or supporting the act. But the silence has been resounding. Yasser Arafat keeps himself in the diplomatic spotlight, leaving his underlings free to engage in the less "respectable" side of the PLO's struggle in the shadows.

Cohen-Orgad's secret

HAVING PRESENTED a fiscal budget that says little more than that the government will spend as much as the Treasury sees fit, and a national budget that contains no economic programme, the finance minister went to Washington to explain how he intends to put our economic house in order.

That is more than Mr. Cohen-Orgad has revealed to the cabinet, to the Knesset, and to the Israeli public in general. Considering that the U.S. Congress has just contributed another $250 million to bailing out our economy, the Americans have first call on being told what our government plans to do for the country.

It seems, however, that the minister has no great message for Washington either. What he has reportedly told the U.S. officials and academics who have interrogated him is that he, and the government for which he speaks, mean to have controlled austerity now and controlled growth later. Where next year's growth — controlled or uncontrolled — is to come from, and how it is to be set in motion, must be one of Mr. Cohen-Orgad's most closely guarded secrets. Neither his fiscal nor his national budget reveals what policy measures are to be directed to that end, and what resources are to be allocated to it.

Perhaps Mr. Cohen-Orgad will be able to convince the Americans that, by the rule that everything that goes down is bound to go up again, the Israeli economy will start growing again all by itself, if only, in the immediate future, it undergoes the therapy of a recession. That, of course, is also to be "controlled".

However, even Mr. Cohen-Orgad's ability to impose an austerity regime — controlled or otherwise — is in doubt.

According to the latest data published by the Bank of Israel, Mr. Cohen-Orgad's first three months in office have shown little sign of his ability to reduce government spending. In the last quarter of 1983 alone, the government injected the staggering amount of IS120 billion into the economy — out of a total of IS200b. in the whole of 1983. In January, the government printed IS20b., and in February the figure may reach IS30b.

Even if that trend is going to change, not everything depends on government spending. The public's behaviour with respect to consumption and savings also determine whether there is going to be a recession, how deep it is going to be, and how long it will last. And the public — at least a segment of it sufficiently large and affluent to affect the aggregate level of consumption significantly — seems to insist on keeping up its customary standards of living, and to reduce its savings for that purpose.

The bunched, this year, of government obligations that have matured will inject a high degree of liquidity into the economy, adding to the fuel of liquidity supplied by the government's excess demand. If the Treasury has any serious plan to cope with that problem and the trend towards falling savings, it has not yet revealed that either.

POSTSCRIPTS

A SYSTEM to mark and identify Tora scrolls was revealed in New York recently at a press conference by Rabbi Israel Miller, honorary chairman of the Universal Torah Registry (UTR).

The system, using micro-perforations, marking paste and a certificate of registry, is the culmination of nearly three years of research by chemists, cryptologists, computer scientists and security experts. Their search was guided by principles laid down by leading rabbinic authorities, Miller said.

Miller said the aim is to ensure that each Tora in the world has a unique code and a corresponding certificate of registry.

The UTR was created in consultation with synagogue, rabbinic, communal and law enforcement groups coordinated by the Jewish Community Relations Council of New York, in response to a rash of thefts across the U.S. and around the world. The system is expected to be implemented in Israel, Europe and other parts of the world.

Malcolm Hoenlein, executive director of the JCRC, said: "We were faced with scores of Tora thefts in the metropolitan area, and even if the police have a lead they find that Tora cannot be identified. We recognized the compelling need for an approach that would protect synagogues and others owning Tora, discourage thieves and so do away with a potential market."

According to JCRC officials, prices for a Tora scroll range from $10,000 to $25,000. Stolen scrolls are sold to unsuspecting congregations, according to law-enforcement officials.

Labour after Levinson

By ASHER WALLFISH

The turmoil following the suicide of Ya'acov Levinson in the Labour Party has already started to subside.

Some of the initial reactions to Levinson's death have come to seem highly emotional, if not hysterical. Party leaders and blocs have called for restraint.

Attempts by a few Labourites to use the Levinson suicide as a lever to bring about changes in the management of the Histadrut are likely to have some results over the next few weeks, though a major reorganization is not expected.

The Levinson tragedy is not a suitable starting point for promoting party influence in the Histadrut, since Levinson worked in the contrary direction, and to some degree shook party shackles off Bank Hapoalim.

Attempts in the wake of the suicide to raise Yitzhak Navon to prominence in the party at the expense of party chairman Shimon Peres and his rival Yitzhak Rabin are expected to splutter out in the near future since neither Peres nor Rabin are involved in the Levinson affair. Nor are they squabbling at present, and are thus not offering the pro-Navon school any easy pretext to say "a plague on both your houses."

Outside Labour, the future is harder to predict. Internal party turmoil can be leashed, but public opinion cannot be controlled.

The complacency felt lately in Labour, thanks to the party's showing in the opinion polls, could easily evaporate if the public sees the Levinson affair as a black mark against Labour in general. If Labour's standing in opinion polls slips, party members will cast about for a gimmick, and the movement advocating Navon as Labour's most effective electoral card will again gather momentum.

The middle-aged membership in Labour has several figures who feel that propelling Navon to the top would open up cracks and crevices through which they could climb upwards to positions of greater influence. This interim age group is sanguine about Navon's talents, and about his drawbacks too. They regard the ex-president as a unifying factor, and also as a figurehead, rather than as a heavyweight, authoritarian personality, though they cannot know how Navon would perform as premier.

Ironically, the best hope for the pro-Navon group in Labour would be if the Levinson affair harms Labour's political standing and a saviour were called in to rescue the party from defeat at the next elections.

The movement in Labour for closer party control over the Histadrut, Hevrat Ha'ovdim and Bank Hapoalim antedates the suicide. Likewise, the movement to shift Peres and Rabin aside in favour of Navon also antedates the affair.

The feeling in Labour before the suicide was that in the unlikely event of the coalition disintegrating, Labour should work for an alternative coalition headed by Peres rather than early elections. The Jerusalem Post was assured that Rabin would come to an arrangement with Peres about getting a fair slice of power and would drop his advocacy of early elections. The Post was also assured that Labour's rank-and-file would be persuaded to back an alternative coalition proposal.

But as the scheduled election date in autumn 1985 comes closer, questions would again be asked in Labour as to the best possible leadership team to garner votes.

Navon's chances would then improve. An assessment would be made as how best to win the floating voters who quit Labour over the years for other parties, and as to whether the upheaval entailed in altering the leadership would be compensated for by more votes. Labour could conceivably prefer to leave the leadership struggle between Peres and Rabin within its body, rather than risk the operation of removing it.

The irony is that while Peres is losing some friends inside the party because of the public's coolness towards him, Rabin is not gaining friends to the same degree.

Most important, by 1985 Labour will have been in the cold for eight years, and party members' main aim will be to get back into the warmth of power and patronage.

Australia's stand on the PLO

By MARK LEIBLER

members or representatives being appointed to or employed at any such Arab League office.

During the course of our meeting with Prime Minister Hawke, a further unequivocal undertaking was given that the Australian government would not permit the establishment of an Arab League office in Australia unless a clear commitment was received that such office would not engage in any boycott activities against Israel or Australia, or Australian citizens and firms trading with Israel. We were assured that breaches of any such commitment would lead to the office's closure.

More significantly, in terms of Israel's international standing, the prime minister undertook to personally monitor the Australian voting position at the United Nations and to ensure that, in future, in relation to resolutions containing one sided anti-Israel elements,

Australia would not find itself isolated in such votes with enemies of Israel.

FOLLOWING our delegation's meeting with Prime Minister Hawke, in a vote taken at the UN General Assembly on December 14, 1983, Australia, together with only three other countries — the U.S., Canada and Israel — voted against the proposition that the PLO be involved in an international Middle East peace conference.

Furthermore, at the recently concluded Commonwealth heads of government meeting in New Delhi, it was only on Prime Minister Hawke's insistence that the final communiqué contained a reference to the withdrawal of all foreign armed forces from Lebanon.

A joint delegation of the Zionist Federation of Australia and the Executive Council of Australian Jewry met Australia's Foreign Minister

Bill Hayden shortly before his January visit to the Middle East. We emphasised the continuing importance of Australia's role in the Multi-national Sinai Peacekeeping Force, and once again reiterated our concerns over any upgrading in official contacts with the PLO — especially in view of its present disarray.

In this context, it is indeed regretted that the Australian foreign minister, during the course of his recent Middle East tour, saw fit to arrange for Australian officials to meet with representatives of the PLO. Mr. Hayden did, however, inform the delegation that Australia's voting pattern at Unesco, which had given rise to concern within the Jewish community and the Zionist movement, would in future be consistent with its votes at other international forums.

Although our fears have been somewhat allayed by the reasurances and undertakings received from Prime Minister Hawke and, although Australia still remains a firm friend of Israel, the fact remains that there has been some shift in Australia's foreign policy — a shift which will hardly be welcomed by Israel's supporters.

I think Asher Wallfish correctly summed up the position in pointing out that we returned from our meeting with Prime Minister Hawke "partly, but not entirely, reassured, resolving to keep our vigilance razor sharp."

The Zionist Federation of Australia has embarked upon a campaign to highlight the danger inherent in permitting the establishment of an Arab League office in Australia. To that end, a background paper, Why Australia must say 'No' to the Arab League has been printed and circulated to all Members of Parliament, journalists, editors and opinion makers throughout Australia. The paper highlights links between the Arab League and the PLO and describes the involvement of the Arab League as an agent of terrorism, blackmail and boycotts.

READERS' LETTERS

BRAVO, TEDDY!

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — In front of our small villa, set in a garden of old Jerusalem pine trees and cypresses, next to Mr. Herzl Military Cemetery and 30 metres from busy Herzl Avenue, there was half a dunam of neglected land, belonging to the Jerusalem Municipality — a place to unload rubbish and trash. Every summer, fires would break out due to cigarettes thrown out from passing vehicles.

At the end of January 1984, I sent a letter to Mayor Teddy Kollek, suggesting that a small park be planted, visually connecting Mt. Herzl with the adjoining Yefeh Nof neighbourhood, we volunteered to take care of irrigation and water bills.

Here is the astonishing timetable of the beginning of another of Jerusalem's lovely corners:

Wednesday, February 1: Phone call from Mr. Darwish, Chief Gardener of the Municipality, informing me that Mayor Kollek wanted him to check out the area. Thursday, February 2, 7.30 a.m.: Mr. Darwish arrives to inspect the area.

Same Thursday, two hours later: Bulldozer working, clearing field of stones and trash, moving rocks.

Friday, February 3: Bulldozer finishes work.

Sunday, February 5: Truck brings pine and cypress saplings for planting.

Monday, February 6: Planting accomplished, saplings watered; rocks positioned to screen off area.

Shabbat, February 11: Family, friends and neighbours discussing plans to further beautify park, all marvelling at Mayor Kollek's incredible speed in carrying out plans, his efficiency, and concern for his citizens.

We are indeed fortunate to have such an excellent mayor. Thank you, Teddy.

HAIFA COMMITTEE FOR SOVIET JEWS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — At the beginning of February 1984, the Haifa Committee for Soviet Jews was formed by more than 50 participants in two parlour meetings that discussed the difficult situation of Jews in the Soviet Union at this time.

The new committee will concentrate on two efforts:

1. To bring the facts of Jewish existence in the Soviet Union before the Israeli public; the first activity to that end will be an open meeting on March 13 at 8 p.m. at Beit Wizo, 50 Moriah Blvd. This and other events, organized in cooperation with other organizations, in schools and in private homes, will be part of the Week of Solidarity with Soviet Jews, to be marked by public meetings and official events throughout Israel.

2. To establish correspondence between individual Israelis and refuseniks in the Soviet Union. This is an effective way of bridging the isolation in which those Jews find themselves, and of helping them to maintain their resolve and lift their spirits.

The Haifa Committee for Soviet Jews invites all the people of this city and its environs to take part in its activity. Offers of cooperation by other groups will be welcome. Further information may be obtained by calling committee members at 04-251957, 247757 and 255104.

BOOKS NEEDED

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — A group of Ethiopian immigrants has recently arrived at Safad's absorption centre. They have been in Israel just under two months and are 16 to 25 years old. They are eager students, and many of them already read both Hebrew and English with relative ease.

We in Safad are anxious to help them and are looking for books in English — laymen's documentaries, novels and books on Jewish subjects. English dictionaries, English-Hebrew dictionaries and books in Hebrew with vowel signs would also be very useful.

If anyone has books like these that they are willing to give, please contact me at 067-70318 or at 5 Anilevich Street, Safad 13400.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post: Sir, — I have been most impressed by the actions of Dov Tabori, Mayor of Petah Tikva, in his striving to break the iron stranglehold that the small religious group holds over the vast majority of the secular population.

At long last, there appears to be a strong movement towards freedom of choice (long overdue), led by Dov Tabori, who, despite threats on his life, is determined to carry on. His sincerity came through loud and clear on Ram Evron's talk show on TV and I hope that the citizens of Petah Tikva will line up behind him and give him the support he deserves. I think it should develop into a national movement to fight theocratic dictates by a very small group of citizens of this country.

After all, hiding behind the flag of status quo, and immediately resorting to threats, does not allow us, the secular population, any method of dialogue, and we can only sit back and watch the slow erosion of our rights and freedom. We have all witnessed the many problems and the violence of Ramot, the promised sports stadium in Jerusalem, the archeological dig, the public transport fiasco of Nahariya, the Ramat Gan social club, etc., etc. The list is endless and one wonders what new demands will come next.

The vast majority of the population of this country want and should demand some say in how we should live in the fading years of the 20th century.
